It provides a rich feast of material with African themes. In its pages you will find games, activities, descriptions of, and links with, a number of African organisations, story-telling and food and recipes. The material is organised to be inspirational and thought provoking for young people in the UK and beyond. It provides a range of examples of what growing up in Africa is really like, which will assist those working with young people to engage their active participation and widen their horizons. More and more young people are showing a passionate interest in African affairs and culture, particularly as a result of the Make Poverty History campaign and Live 8. This book provides ways of channelling that interest. It will help young people to move from the local to the global. It is inclusive, and presents materials, information, networking links and activities as positive group experiences for young people in the UK. It offers real life insights into what co-author Denis Kigongo, from Uganda, calls, "the beauty and diversity of Africa and respect for other cultures."
